Preface

Globalization is defined as the increasing interdependence, interconnection, and integration of economies and society to the point where an event in one part of the world has an impact on individuals in other parts of the world. Other concepts associated with the term "globalisation" include "global culture" and "global economic integration." Globalization is a significant factor with profound impact on human activities that spreads beyond national boundaries of countries worldwide. The human activities consisting of economic, social, cultural, political, technological and so many other types have been manually interacting with each other. Globalization affects all such types of human activities in different ways.

Globalization is the process by which a government-run organisation or agency establishes a variety of international ties. The establishment of the relationship is based on the active participation of numerous components. It is not limited to just international interactions when the variables develop a positive relationship among themselves. The bed is inextricably linked to global issues such as the economy, trade, communication, export, industrialization, and so on. International relations, on the other hand, are primarily concerned with political concepts. Most experts believe globalization to be an economic idea, thus they sit down to discuss it in depth, which is not wholly unjustified.

With its robust democracy and strong relationships, India has emerged as the world's fastest growing major economy and is anticipated to be one of the top three economic powers in the next 10-15 years. India's economy is the world's third largest in terms of purchasing power parity and nominally the fifth largest. Today if we deeply analysis on globalization and development then we find the Indian governance are fully run with the influence of globalization to the development in differ rent fields of the country.

Developing countries like India have made their mark on the world stage since independence. The country used globalization as a tool to improve trade and commerce with the rest of the world. Today many developing country's economic and national income has increased. But extraordinarily poor people are deprived of important issues like education and health of the country. A class of people in society use this technology to achieve economic development with the helped of globalization. On the other hand, a class of people lives in the same poor, oppressed, and exploited conditions just like the fish living on the shore.

Globalization has accelerated in recent years as a result of rapid technological advancements, particularly in the areas of communications and transportation. In 1991, India's government made modifications to its economic strategy, allowing direct foreign investment into the country. Globalization has seen overall economic development in the major areas of the Indian economy since this time.

At present, all the states are carrying out their development activities with the help of globalization. As a result, there is a deep connection between globalization, governance and development. Therefore, in the present modern state and society, the three issues like globalization, governance and development have become very important, it is impossible to discuss other issues without any of them. This edited book attempts to highlight the various things related to globalization through various articles, which has been contributed by reputed scholars from many part of the country.

This work is possible with the blessing of our parents and family members whose continues inspiration guided us for publications this book in time. Our sincere thanks to all the chapter contributors without their contributions this edited volume would not have been possible. As a whole the book got the complete shape because of the great initiative of Kunal Books publication. We would like to express our thanks to all the parts of the publishing house.

THE IMPACT OF GLOBALISATION ON WOMEN IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Pranoy Dey

Abstract

Globalisation is a significant factor with profound impact on human activities that spreads beyond national boundaries of countries worldwide. The human activities consisting of economic, social, cultural, political, technological and so many other types have been mutually interacting with each other. Globalisation affects all such types of human activities in different ways. These different types as mentioned are carried out by both males and females of our society, but women clearly stand out as distinct group of the society upon whom the impact of globalisation has been most significant. The impact of globalisation on women are more complicated. It is a double-edged process as far as women are concerned. The impact of globalisation has brought about positive as well as negative effects on almost every societal aspect in the present-day world. It has increased the ability of women in developing countries and has empowered them to a process that helps them to assert their control over the factors which affect their lives and they have developed themselves as more conscious individual, who have been playing as mother by looking after her children, as wife by performing duties of domestic world, economically productive as labourer in different sector, politically sound and decision makers from grass root to apex level and so on. Globalisation has contributed to bring about welcome changes in the lives particularly to those, who have been able to avail the opportunities, that have opened up them to the various sectors of development. But despite their growing leading role, it is a matter of concern that globalisation has led to economic exploitation of a section of women,

ABOUT THE BOOK

The term "Globalization" refers to the process of integrating a country's economy with the global economy. It's a multifaceted problem. Globalization has a profound and very immediate influence on India as a whole. Export subsidies and import taxes were eliminated, allowing for more free trade, which support India's socio-economic development.
