This is the system of allocation of land, resources, labour, and capital that underpins the production of goods and services for human use, also known as an economic system. Additionally, the value of goods and services within a community is determined by those in positions of authority. It is commonly used to describe a nation and its various attributes, such as its wealth, level of consumption, rate of inflation, rate of economic growth, and rate of decline. However, it can also be used to characterise the local market, business district, state economy, etc.

Development is a process that produces growth, advancement, positive change, or the addition of physical, economic, environmental, social, and demographic elements. The objective of development is to improve the standard of living and quality of life of the population, as well as to create or expand local regional income and employment opportunities, without degrading natural resources. Development is observable and beneficial, albeit not necessarily immediately, and includes a component of quality change and the establishment of conditions for its continuation.

Actually 'Development' means that a country's economy and society are getting better. More specifically, it means making changes to how the natural and human resources of an area are managed. So that people can get rich and their lives can get better.

The discussion of problems and possibilities is an important issue in this context of socio-economic development. Within this framework, we will talk about the many different topics that are insightful. On the specific topic of all of these themes, numerous works of systematic review and discussion books have been written.

Literature as an Instrument for the Development of Society

Paramita Ghosh*

Abstract: Literature is a type of art and a mirror of society. People can get fresh perspectives and new ways of thinking about the world through studying literature. It entails reflection on the nature of society and how people interact within its boundaries, and it can help people present themselves as educated members of society. Literature should be studied more carefully in order to comprehend how it influences a person's motivations and how their society is reflected in it. It has the power to elicit a range of emotions as well as an overall feeling of well-being. It has the power to alter someone's viewpoints. The primary goal of the current work is a succinct analysis of literature and its effects on human society. There are many various sorts of literature, including oral, written, scientific and technical. It carries out many tasks at various levels. The culture of a society is reflected in its literature. This paper comes to the conclusion that Literature has the ability to help various human societies achieve sustainable development.

Keywords: Literature, Society, Culture, Spiritual Well-being, Sustainable Development.

either unpleasant or colourless. While reality tends to be pretty charming and even terrible, imagination makes things colourful. Because they enable readers to temporarily escape from life's reality, the imaginative writers' works are therefore what readers turn to for entertainment, whilst the realistic writers' works act as a mirror of society and modern times.
